[Note by KG] (School of Sociology) General education courses that are not taught by a certain department are counted as courses of the Department of Sociology.

Courses in the A and C Groups are counted among courses of “General Education” and those in the B Group are counted among courses of “Specialized Education.” However, “Sociology Relay Lectures A and B” and “Research Seminar I and II” are included among courses of specialized education.

Although there are a few students enrolled in the School of Social Welfare, the school’s specialized courses are provided by the School of Human Welfare Studies because the students who entered in the last year of the school’s student recruitment have graduated in the 2010 academic year. Since there is no course that is offered solely by the School of Social Welfare, no data is recorded in columns related to the school.

(School of Social Welfare: It has suspended student recruitment since the 2007 academic year. Instructors belonging to the school were moved to the School of Human Welfare Studies in the 2008 academic year. Subsequently, the transfer of all specialized courses of this school to the School of Human Welfare Studies was completed in the 2010 academic year.)

[Note by KG] (School of Business Administration) Since the 2012 academic year, the Basic Education Course that had been categorized in specialized education until the previous year and the Seminar of Humanities have been counted among courses of general education. Elective courses of general education have been offered in a different form since the same academic year. The curriculum of specialized education was amended; basic economics was newly established as a required course and a new class of basic bookkeeping was added.

Among the specialized subjects for specific courses, Research Seminar I and II have been listed as elective courses since the 2011 academic year.

Courses necessary for obtaining credits of the School of Business Administration have been counted as courses of general education since the 2011 academic year.

- [Note] 1. This table shows the condition of courses taught by full-time instructors in relation to “class subjects deemed to be essential from an educational standpoint” mentioned in Article 10 of the Standards for Establishment of Universities.
2. “Courses Taught by Full-time Instructor” shall include courses taught concurrently by full-time instructors from other undergraduate or graduate schools or institutes.
3. Instead of the names of “Specialized Education” and “General Education,” universities can determine names of each category according to their classifications. In that case, however, courses shall roughly be classified into those of specialized education and those of general education.
4. In the “All Courses Offered” column, enter the total number of required, elective required, elective and free elective courses rather than the sum of only required and elective required courses.
5. A course offered twice a week shall be calculated in the following manner:
- ① When the course is offered by a single instructor → if the instructor is a full-time instructor, count the course as 1 course taught by full-time instructor. If the instructor is a part-time instructor, count the course as 1 course taught by a part-time instructor.
- ② When the course is taught by several instructors → if all the instructors are full-time instructors, count the course as 1 course taught by full-time instructor. If the instructors include both full-time and part-time instructors, count the course as 0.5 courses taught by a full-time instructor and 0.5 courses taught by a part-time instructor.
6. When an experiment or practical training subject is taught by several instructors including part-time instructors, count the subject according to the percentage of each type of instructor (e.g., if four full-time instructors and one part-time instructor taught the subject, add 0.8 to the courses taught by full-time instructors and 0.2 to the courses taught by part-time instructors.)
